The North American Caribou Workshop and Arctic Ungulate Conference attract high-level speakers and participants from North America and Europe. We are thrilled to offer a joint NACW-AUC meeting in 2023, to bring together a diverse cross-section of experts and stakeholders. Whether they are biologists, conservationists, representatives of Indigenous communities, resource managers, decision-makers or industry professionals, all participants aim to share knowledge, ideas and initiatives, and to discuss the challenges associated with the conservation of arctic ungulates, an icon of northern ecosystems.

Through its plethora of presentations and plenary sessions, NACW-AUC showcases the most advanced scientific knowledge, ungulate population management and recovery initiatives, and Indigenous traditional knowledge.

We are thrilled to offer the opportunity for partners and sponsors to join us at the NACW-AUC joint meeting. Your involvement will raise awareness about your organization and help support sharing of knowledge among a diverse groups of ungulate researchers, Indigenous leaders, and local stakeholders. We hope you will join us!

HOW CAN YOUR ORGANIZATION PARTICIPATE?

The NACW & AUC organizing committee invites you to participate as a financial partner, exhibitor and/or advertiser. Financial support is essential to ensure the success of such a major event. Your support will make it possible to organize and hold this event, which is an invaluable opportunity to share knowledge, to learn and network, to the benefit of species that are icons of northern circumpolar environments.

We expect 300 - 500 conference attendees in beautiful Anchorage, Alaska. Your organization's financial support for NACW & AUC is an opportunity to be visible at a North American scientific event involving key stakeholders and decision makers, and it shows your commitment to collaborate on initiatives aimed at sustainable ungulate management at both national and international levels.
